

The Chase Home Museum of Utah Folk Arts

SCHOOL TOUR INFORMATION

The Chase Home Museum is housed in the historic home of the Chase Family, and has four galleries showcasing contemporary Utah folk arts. The museum incorporates information on the history of Liberty Park and the house in a timeline display on the first level. Educating the public about folk and traditional arts through activities/interactives is a goal for the museum, and the staff is always learning new ways to engage students. Please refer to the educational materials provided through the website for curriculum alignment.

We are a small museum in an historic house, therefore we suggest groups of 15 visitors at a time. A larger group can be split up by having a smaller crew tour the museum while the other groups wait on the front porch or in the park. In the case of bad weather we can bring the smaller groups through simultaneously in a rotating manner from room to room.

Please be aware that access to the second floor galleries are accessible by stairs only. The two galleries on the main floor are ADA compliant.

There are public restroom facilities to the North and South of the museum which may be closed during the winter. Alternately, there are portable toilets behind the tennis courts just to the northwest of the museum along 500 East that are open during the winter season.

Please note that the museum does not have an indoor area for dining. If you decide to have lunch in the park on your visit to the museum, please take the weather into consideration. During the warm season the park is lovely to have a picnic in, but when it's cold and snowing there are very few options available for outside eating. Please be sure to schedule your trip accordingly.

The Chase Home Museum is a program of the Utah Division of Arts & Museums / Department of Heritage & Arts
