STATEWIDE ANNUAL EXHIBITION UT’20
PAINTING & SCULPTURE
Visual arts competitions and exhibitions have been a project of the Utah Division of Arts & Museums since 1899, providing juried exhibitions open to all artists across the state of Utah. This juried exhibition surveys the best emerging and professional artists in Utah.
All images courtesy of the artist, except Worked, photographed by Andy Cvar.
Please be advised that color may not be true to the original artwork.
All works in this exhibition were created within the last three years.
Every three years, the Visual Arts Program at the Division of Arts & Museums presents the Statewide Annual Exhibition in the category of Painting & Sculpture. This category is one of the most anticipated call for entries by Utah-based artists, making it a highly competitive, juried exhibition. Over 500 artworks were submitted for consideration by nearly 300 artists working in a wide range of styles within the mediums of painting and sculpture. These entries came from artists living as far north as Smithfield, as far south as St. George and in many cities in between.

This year, in the wake of an ongoing public-health crisis that forced cultural organizations worldwide to reimagine their events, the Statewide Annual Exhibition is presented digitally, which is a first in the exhibition’s 121-year history. Though it is undeniable that viewing artwork digitally does not compare to the physical experience of seeing it in real life, we have focused on the positive aspects that offering this program digitally provides our audience. Unlike physical exhibitions, online exhibitions are not restricted by gallery space, are available 24 hours a day, and can be viewed from the comfort of one’s home.

Our guest jurors embraced the benefits of a digital exhibition by including large-scale pieces and site-specific installations, which are shown in this exhibition using documentation captured by the artists. The additional selected artworks stand out for their particular choice of materials that break the mold of traditional art forms, this can be seen in (Of Five Bullets)

Only One is Used by Wren Ross, a monoprint created with salt, breast milk, and graphite; in Jill Smith’s mixed-media sculpture Child’s Blanket, which incorporates a childhood comfort blanket, concrete, and roots; or in Virginia Catherall’s Visible Mending: Temple Spoon, a mangled silver spoon mended using silk and stainless steel yarn.

Finally, I would like to thank and recognize artists Edra Soto and Pooja Pittie, both from Chicago, Illinois, for their participation as this year’s jurors. Their unique expertise and enthusiasm created a compelling, thoughtful, and timely juried exhibition. My gratitude also goes out to all of the artists who participated in our call for entries, the selected artists, and a big congratulations to the award-winners!

NANCY RIVERA
Visual Arts Coordinator
It is my distinct honor to serve as a juror with esteemed colleague, artist Pooja Pittie, for the Painting & Sculpture Statewide Annual for the Utah Division of Arts & Museums. My most sincere thanks to Visual Arts Program Manager, Nancy Rivera, for the kind invitation. Congratulations for doing such magnificent work for this organization.

With great enthusiasm, I extend my congratulations to all of the participating artists. Your work was inspiring and indicative of the rich cultural activity in the state of Utah. It was delightful to navigate the diversity of mediums and stylistic approaches as much as the conceptual and activist-minded approaches in tandem with our current environment. It is now more than ever that we need to celebrate the adventurous voices of artists that resist conforming to conventional and academic approaches, instead advocating for social and racial justice, mental health, and environmental concerns.

In the case of the selected Best of Show artist Andrew Alba, titled Worked, his approach to sculptural and painting material usage to create a representation of essential workers in the age of Covid-19 lingers in our minds as we drift through the various sites he explores that inform his narrative. The urban setting serves as the backdrop for Alba’s hand-crafted characters, resulting in an enigmatic and moving portrait.

Equally moving are the works of Juror’s Award recipients Carlos Matamoros, Claire Taylor, Lis Pardoe, Annette Summers, Jason Lanegan and Annie Wing. Beautifully crafted, the paintings of Carlos Matamoros expresses his narrative through a portrait of a man reading, accompanied by a very simple but powerful statement It is never too late to learn how to read. Claire Taylor’s landscape setting, generously engages in personal details, capturing past and recent memories. From divergent perspectives, the works of Lis Pardoe and Annette Summers call out for vulnerability at its core. The sculptural approaches of Jason Lanegan and Annie Wing find inspiration in the natural environment, architectural elements and spatial relationships.

The Honorary Mention, awarded to collaborative artists Colour Maisch and Gary Vlasic examines discarded material value while artist Suzanna Bybee’s expressive mixed media work evokes the urban environment.

As a professional artist, it is always conflicting to be in the position of judging and inevitably rejecting other artists’ works. Let it be known that this task is never an easy one. The only thing that qualifies my role is the years of training and experience looking, analyzing and being immersed in the art world. I’m no stranger to rejection. I attribute a lot of the success I have experienced to the many rejections that have led me to reflect on my practice and forms of communicating through my visual work. To this point I would like to add that it is important not to let the moments of rejection dissuade you from your artistic goals. Continue to dedicate yourself to your practice, studying and cultivating your curiosity.

Recognizing artistic practices allows us to validate independent voices that influence our concept of value, culture and humanity. Be a proponent of a world enriched by art and culture.
It is an honor to serve as one of the jurors for the Statewide Annual Exhibition UT ’20: Painting and Sculpture organized by the Utah Division of Arts & Museums. It was a pleasure working alongside my co-juror, Edra Soto, to select work from the entries submitted by almost 300 artists!

I want to extend my sincere congratulations to all the artists who put their work forward for consideration. The diversity of work and strength of skills were impressive. I really wanted to learn more about each artist and dig deeper into their process. Going through the broad range of submissions was a visual and emotional treat. Andrew Alba’s Worked and Lis Pardoe’s The Space Between gave me an insight into their minds as they tackled themes related to the global pandemic through different media. I was moved by the tenderness of Carlos Matamoros’s El Lector (The Reader) and the resilience of time in Claire Taylor’s Remote Return.

I am thankful to Nancy Rivera and Tory Guilfoyle for their organizational skills and making the selection process as easy as possible, especially since we had to meet virtually. It was a humbling opportunity to jury an exhibition that has been in existence since 1899 and brings together the voices of artists across the state of Utah.
Andrew Alba is a self-taught artist and descendant of Mexican migrant workers, Alba’s large scale paintings and drawings evoke an emotional response while still maintaining relevant commentary on contemporary politics and society. Alba recently finished an Artist-In-Residence at the Utah Museum of Contemporary Art and is currently the Artist-In-Residence at Modern West Fine Art. Alba has exhibited work throughout the Pacific Northwest and Salt Lake City where he was born, raised, and currently resides.

ARTIST STATEMENT

This series of sculptures is part of a traveling exhibition commenting on the idea of non-essential vs. essential workers in the age of COVID-19. The work traveled all over the city such as malls, the Salt Lake District Attorney’s office, police stations, and construction sites.
